LITCI2202 AUSTRALIAN LITERATURE

- A1. Construct a clear and coherent argument in written form, making appropriate use of evidence and quotations from literary texts, and using appropriate referencing (MLA), and presentation skills;
- A2. Apply concepts from the study of Australian literature to contemporary social, cultural, and/or political contexts;
- A3. Recognise and reflect on the social and cultural significance of literary texts in relation to contemporary social and political discourses;
- A4. Evaluate and explain critical sources used for research essay.

Course Content:

This course combines a historical overview of Australian literary and print culture with intensive study of selected themes and literary genres. Some themes and issues studied include the construction of myths of national identity in literary, historical and critical texts; the representation of landscape and 'the bush' in white settler and indigenous writing; migration and cultural identity; the roles of women as authors and subjects in literary print culture; the development of the short story form, the emergence of indigenous writing, and various phases of Australian poetry.

Values and Graduate Attributes:

Values:

- V1. Respect and appreciate the diversity within Australia's literary and cultural history and life
- V2. Understand that the study of written literature in Australia is the study of a predominantly European culture
- V3. Acknowledge the significance and value of oral, visual and material cultural traditions of indigenous Australians
- V4. Recognise that global / transnational forces are reflected in a living literary culture, even when the focus is on a 'national' literature.

Graduate Attributes:

Attribute	Brief Description	Focus
Continuous Learning	Students gain an understanding of how Australian literary culture has developed since British settlement, and how it continues to change; they learn to recognise significant ideas, themes, and genres in ways that will enhance their understanding of Australian culture.	High
Self Reliance	Students are required to manage their time and participation in the course, to acquire any technical skills required to use the online teaching platform, to cover enough of the set readings to pass a test or exam, to conduct independent research, and to develop their own line of arguments in response to essay topics.	High
Engaged Citizenship	The course considers questions about what it means to 'be Australian,' and how such concepts are manifested or expressed in contemporary life.	High
Social Responsibility	The course invites or challenges students to apply insights and knowledge acquired through the study of literary texts to their thinking on social issues and engagement with others in the community.	Medium
